This book builds on a series of published articles, and I am grateful to the publishers for permission to draw on them here. Chapter 3 incorporates material that appeared as ‘From Paradigm-Based Explanation to Pragmatic Genealogy’, Mind, 129, no. 515 (2020), 683–714, by permission of Oxford University Press, Copyright © 2019. Chapter 5 draws on ‘Nietzsche’s Pragmatic Genealogy of Justice’, British Journal for the History of Philosophy, 25, no. 4 (2017), 727–49, by permission of Taylor & Francis Ltd., Copyright © 2017, and ‘Nietzsche’s English Genealogy of Truthfulness’, Archiv für Geschichte der Philosophie, 103, no. 2 (2021), by permission of Walter de Gruyter, Copyright © 2021. Parts of Chapter 6 echo ‘Genealogy and Knowledge-First Epistemology: A Mismatch?’, The Philosophical Quarterly, 69, no. 274 (2019), 100–20, by permission of Oxford University Press, Copyright © 2019. Chapter 7 is based on ‘Williams’s Pragmatic Genealogy and Self-Effacing Functionality’, Philosophers’ Imprint, 18, no. 17 (2018), 1–20, by permission of Michigan Publishing, Copyright © 2018, while Chapter 9 builds on ‘How Genealogies Can Affect the Space of Reasons’, Synthese, 197, no. 5 (2020), 2005–27, by permission of Springer Nature, Copyright © 2018. The quotation from Sally Haslanger on page xiii is from ‘Social Meaning and Philosophical Method’, Proceedings and Addresses of the American Philosophical Association, 88 (2014): 16–37.

These articles grew out of a dissertation written under the auspices of Markus Wild and Martin Kusch. I am grateful to them for their unfailing support and generosity as well as for encouraging me to write this book, which would not be the same without their incisive comments and suggestions. Many of the ideas presented in the book took shape over years of stimulating discussion with Damian Cueni, who did a great deal to sharpen and enrich them along the way. I have also been fortunate to have such a supportive editor in Peter Momtchiloff and to receive such thoughtful comments from two anonymous readers for Oxford University Press.

While working on this book, I have benefited on several occasions from the help and advice of Hanjo Glock, Simon Blackburn, and Amia Srinivasan, whose influence on my thinking has been profound. My debt to Miranda Fricker’s work will be evident in the many places where I discuss it, but not the generosity with which she provided comments on the third chapter and encouraged the project thereafter.

The bulk of the book was written in the supportive atmosphere of the Philosophical Seminar of the University of Basel, and I am indebted to Anne Meylan, Basil Müller, Brigitte Hilmer, Christine Sievers, Deborah Mühlebach, Friederike Zenker, Gunnar Hindrichs, Hubert Schnüriger, Jan Müller, Jelscha Schmid, Julia Wentzlaff, Marie van Loon, Mario Schärli, Melanie Sarzano, Michael O’Leary, Muriel Leuenberger, Nico Müller, and Thomas Jacobi for discussions of early versions of the material. I am also grateful for the help I received from Alexander Fischer, Anna Lettieri-Beck, Bettina Huber, Dominik Renner, Emil Angehrn, Marc Sommer, Nadja Heller Higy, Pietro Snider, Samuel Tschärner, Simone Chambers, Susanne Kress, and Susanne Schmetkamp. A particular debt is to Rebekka Hufendiek, who, as a fellow explorer of genealogies, accompanied the book from its inception. I owe the opportunity to explore the ideas that became this book to the Swiss National Science Foundation’s wonderful career-funding schemes. An Excellent Junior Researcher Grant of the Max Geldner Foundation then enabled me to concentrate on revising the manuscript for another year before finalizing it in the vibrant intellectual environment of Wolfson College, Oxford.

It does take a village to write a book, and I have received help and suggestions at various junctures from Adrian Moore, Alexander Prescott-Couch, Andreas Cremonini, Andreas Müller, Andreas Urs Sommer, Andrew Huddleston, Anna Goppel, Ariane Schneck, Benedict Vischer, Brian Leiter, Cheryl Misak, Chris Janaway, Claus Beisbart, Constantine Sandis, Daniel James, David Owen, David Wörner, Dominique Kuenzle, Emma Tieffenbach, Francesco Testini, Friedemann Bieber, Georg Brun, Hallvard Lillehammer, Herman Cappelen, Jennifer Marušić, Joachim Schulte, Johannes Steizinger, John Brennan, John Skorupski, Joseph Shear, Katherina Kinzel, Katia Saporiti, Ken Gemes, Livia von Samson-Himmelstjerna, Lorenzo Greco, Manuel Dries, Marcel van Ackeren, Marco Toscano, Mario Brandhorst, Mark Wrathall, Markus Stepanians, Michael Hannon, Michel Meliopoulos, Mindaugas Gilautis, Nicholas Smyth, Nicole Rathgeb, Nikhil Krishnan, Olivier Massin, Patricia Williams, Paul de Font-Reaulx, Paul Roth, Paul Russell, Peter Kail, Philip Pettit, Philippe Queloz, Raphael van Riel, Robin McKenna, Ruth Millikan, and Scott Jenkins. I have also benefited from conversations with Alen Zovkic, Edele Mancini, David Misteli, Andreas Schönenberger, Lucius Caviola, and Mümün Gencoglu. As Hume said, the feast of reason is best enjoyed in the company of good friends.

Last but not least, I would like to thank Julia Wagner for her steady support and philosophical help and challenge, and my brother, Antonin Queloz, who showed me that philosophy without music would be a mistake. This book is dedicated to my parents, Sonja and Jean-Jacques Queloz. There is no genealogy of my ideas that does not trace back to them.
