

A Different Voice, A Different Song: Reclaiming Community through the Natural Voice and World Song

Caroline Bithell

Print publication date: 2014

Print ISBN-13: 9780199354542

Published to Oxford Scholarship Online: October 2014

DOI: 10.1093/acprof:oso/9780199354542.001.0001

(p.xiii) Acknowledgements

This book could not have been written without the willing collaboration and practical support of a great number of individuals and organisations whose contributions it is my pleasure to acknowledge here. Conducting the research has been an intense, intriguing, salutary, and life-affirming experience. I have had the privilege of joining thousands of singers in all manner of settings, from musty community halls and damp British streets to Caucasian mountain villages and the stages of London's Cultural Olympiad. These singers have, for the most part, been "ordinary" people, technically "amateurs"; among them have been some of the most vibrant, generous, committed—and indeed musical—people I could ever wish to meet. I have also had the honour of working with leading lights from the international voice world and with a host of traditional singing specialists from different parts of the globe. Among my happiest memories are the long hours spent travelling across Georgia and Bosnia with fellow singing enthusiasts from different countries who quickly became friends, as did our hosts and teachers in the places we visited. Song-filled residential workshops and gatherings in rambling old mansions come a close second. While many of those who have accompanied me on this journey are named in these pages, many more remain anonymous. Thank you, all of you, for the inspiration, companionship, and hospitality along the way.

I am especially indebted to the scores of people who agreed to extensive interviews and to those who responded (again, often at length) to my questionnaire surveys. These include members of or participants at events organised by the Natural Voice Practitioners' Network, Village Harmony, Unicorn Camps, and Giving Voice/The Centre for Performance Research. In addition, many choirs across the UK welcomed me into their rehearsals, and choir leaders and members often welcomed me into their homes as well. In particular, I would like to thank the following interviewees for graciously sharing their stories, insights, and reflections, whether personal or professional: Zaka Aman, Stephanie Anderson, Frankie Armstrong, Madge Bray, Polly Bolton, John Bowker, Ali Burns, Bernard Burns, Geoff Burton, David Burbidge, Helen Chadwick, Ann Chamberlayne, Nina Chandler, Nickomo and Rasullah Clarke, Annie Cockburn, Daniel Cohen, Gideon Crevoshay, Sian Croose, Patty Cuyler, (p.xiv) Anita Daulne, Sally Davies, Colin and Ann Douglas, Pauline Down, Rosie Elkinton, Nicoletta Freedman, Katherina Garratt-Adams, Michele George, Jules Gibb, Lucy Gibson, Larry Gordon, Katie Griffiths, Sarah Harman, Michael Harper, Sue Harris, Su Hart, Bill Henderson, Moira Hill, Liz Hodgson, Chris Hoskins, Dee Jarlett, Bruce Knight, Anthony Johnston, Joseph Jordania, Frank Kane, Carl Linich, Pete Linnett, Becca Linton, Gareth Malone, Kirsty Martin, Imke McMurtrie, Joan Mills, Fiona Mills-Carlyon, Ketevan Mindorashvili, Nana Mzhavanadze, Kate O'Connell, Sue Parlby, Shergil Pirtskhelani, Nick Prater, Fran Priest, Irene Railley, James MacDonald Reid, Linda Roast, Chris Rowbury, Jackie Roxborough, Frank Rozelaar-Green, Cath Saunt, Bev Sedley, Polina Shepherd, Kate Shruballs, Yvette Staelens, Janet Stansfeld, Dessi Stefanova, Mollie Stone, Olu Taiwo, Mark Thomas, Hannah Rose Tristram, Rusudan Tsurtsunia, David Tugwell, Tamta Turmanidze, Candy Verney, Teresa Verney, Tijana Vignjević, Roz Walker, Margaret Walton, Jane Wells, Rowena Whitehead, Derek Wilcox, Hilary Wilson, Jenn Woodward, Tony Wrench, Lynn Yule, and Nato Zumbadze. Together, these and others provided me with far more material than would fit between these covers. There is more to come . . .

Thank you, too, to those who allowed me to film their performances and informal musical interactions and subsequently agreed to allow me to include extracts from my video collection on the book's companion website. In addition to those featured in the recordings, I am grateful to the following event organisers for accommodating me and smoothing my way: Ali Burns (NVPN annual gatherings), Helen Chadwick, Roxane Smith, and the WaterAid team (Sing for Water, Thames Festival), Jules Gibb (Sing for Water North), Angela Gracey (National Street Choirs Festival, Bury), Patty Cuyler (Village Harmony camp, Georgia), Madge Bray (Lakhushdi trip), and Rusudan Tsurtsunia (International Symposium on Traditional Polyphony, Tbilisi).

It would have been impossible to complete the book itself without the Research Fellowship awarded by the Leverhulme Trust which, in tandem with a semester of institutional leave granted by the University of Manchester, gave me an entire year free of other commitments during which I was able to devote my full attention to this project. Two Small Research Grants from the British Academy and a travel grant from the Music and Letters Trust helped fund earlier phases of fieldwork that paved the way for the book (as well as resulting in other more modest outputs). For all of these I am profoundly thankful.

At Oxford University Press I have benefitted from the expert guidance of executive editor Suzanne Ryan and the ever cheerful and efficient work of editorial assistants Jessen O'Brien, Lisbeth Redfield, and of editor Norm Hirschy, who oversaw the construction of the companion website. I am especially grateful for the detailed commentaries offered by OUP's anonymous readers. Their astute and constructive critiques have contributed significantly (p.xv) to the shape taken by the final manuscript. I have also benefitted from the questioning, advice, and encouragement of colleagues at a series of conferences and research seminars where I presented aspects of this research in its earlier stages: my thanks in particular to those who engaged with my presentations at conferences organised by the Society for Ethnomusicology in Atlanta and at Wesleyan University, the International Council for Traditional Music in St. John's, Newfoundland, and the ICTM study group Mediterranean Music Studies in Malta, and—here in the UK—my guest lectures and research papers at the universities of Newcastle, Edinburgh, and Manchester, King's College London, and the Institute of Musical Research, University of London.

Special thanks are due to my daughter Chloe, who took many of the photographs featured in the book and on the companion website and also acted as expert proofreader. Throughout the project's long gestation, she was a source of sound and ever-patient advice while keeping me fed and watered as I navigated the peaks and troughs of the writing process. Sue Biddle transcribed many of the recorded interviews. Frankie Armstrong read and commented on the entire manuscript: I have greatly valued her enthusiasm and support.

Among those who nurtured my own love of singing, a special mention goes to Sian Ellis Williams, an extraordinarily gifted, energetic, and dedicated music teacher who on joining the staff of Flint High School launched not one but several choirs and introduced us to musical gems from many different times and places. Later, Helen Chadwick, Joan Mills, and Edisher Garakanidze (perhaps unwittingly) provided more stepping-stones that helped me forge my own path and eventually led to this book. Thanks, too, to my parents, Auriol and Peter Bithell, whose readiness to drive halfway across the country to look after three small children allowed me to attend some of the formative events of the 1980s that have now found their way into these pages. At times they wondered what exactly I was up to: here is the answer.

At the heart of this project lies the pioneering work of Frankie Armstrong, members of the Natural Voice Practitioners' Network, and others treading parallel paths in the world of community music-making, both here in the UK and elsewhere in the world. I hope this book will be useful to them, in part as a history of the movement they have helped to shape. I have endeavoured to double-check all factual data and ensure that relevant details are as up-to-date as possible at the time of going to press. I apologise for any oversights, errors, or omissions.

Acknowledgements

A final thank you to the thousands of singers out there who have gladdened my heart every step of the way. Long may your voices ring! (p.xvi)

Access brought to you by: